

Lady Diana and the Daily Meditations of Omraam Mikhaël Aïvanhov

Lady Diana, Princess of Wales, the “Rose of England”, was perhaps the most beloved woman of the twentieth century. At her death, the whole world came to a standstill, and her funeral was followed by more than two billion people around the world. She left an indelible memory in all hearts.

Her beauty, her nobility and her elegance conquered everyone without distinction of social class, culture or religion. As she herself said after her divorce from Prince Charles: “I would like to be the queen in peoples’ hearts.” Her desire was realized.

Lady Diana

The life and death of Lady Diana profoundly touched millions of people, evoking a profound compassion for her. In her desire to help others and to be of service to the most destitute, she inspired sentiments of goodness in us.

It can thus be said that Princess Diana cultivated a high ideal, a mission, a desire to be of service to humanity.

Not surprisingly, twenty years after her death, we discover that Princess Diana read and followed the teaching of the philosopher and spiritual Master Omraam Mikhael Aivanhov. She confirmed this in a letter addressed to her friend Dudley Poplak.

But where was this letter found?

On June 14, 2017, the auction house Dominic Winter Auctioneers, founded in 1988, located in the Cotswold aquatic park and specializing in historic books, maps, stamps, autographs and documents, put up for bid, among other things, the autographed letters of Lady Diana and Prince Charles.

One of these letters, three pages long, written by Princess Diana on Kensington Palace letterhead, dated February 1, 1992, is addressed to Dudley Poplak, an interior designer and close friend of both Prince Charles and Princess Diana.

<https://www.dominicwinter.co.uk/sale/-printed-books-and-maps-jun17-1/lot-366>

Autograph letter signed 'Diana', on Kensington Palace letterhead, 1 February 1992,

To Dudley Poplak, 'I have been fascinated by the contents of the Daily Meditations, as for a couple of years now I've followed the French philosopher Omraam Mikhael Aivanhov's way of thinking, but in my travels had not come across this particular Edition. You are marvellous, Dudley, the way you've kindly sent me all these things to read - They do interest me enormously. If its not too much of a bore for you I'd like to say a 'yes please' to the Daily Word', ending with renewed thanks for finding all these readings, 'What a treat it is for me!', 3 pp. on 2 sheets of Kensington Palace letterhead, with the original stamped envelope (no postmark) addressed in Princess Diana's hand.

Dudley Poplak was an interior designer and a good friend of both Prince Charles and Princess Diana. Omraam Mikhael Aivanhov (1900-1986) was a Bulgarian philosopher and mystic who taught that to achieve a better life one must have a high ideal.

Omraam Mikhaël Aïvanhov (1900-1986)

